

English Social Life Changes, Is Writer's Topic

"CHANGES in English Social Life" is the title of the lecture which Victoria Sackville-West, the brilliant young English novelist, will deliver before the Woman's club at its weekly meeting Thursday. Preceding her talk, Miss Sackville-West will be entertained at luncheon by the chairmen of the day, Mrs. Theodore F. Vogel and Mrs. Douglass Van Dyke.

The author of "The Edwardians," "All Passion Spent," "The Land" and "Challenge" is peculiarly fitted to speak on the mutations of viewpoint and social values which have marked her country in this century.

Born in 1892 at Knole, in Kent, the ancestral estate of her parents, Lord and Lady Sackville, she passed her early life in the center of the Edwardian aristocracy, and for the past two decades she and her husband, Harold Nicolson, have been in complete rapport with England's changing social and governmental life.

She is a member of the Bloomsbury group — that distinguished coterie of writers which included Virginia Woolf, (of whose novel, "Orlando," she is the heroine), Lytton Strachey, Rebecca West, the Sitwells, John Maynard Keynes and E. M. Forster.
