

Museum Job Meets Delay

Further Study Asked

The museum board of trustees Monday afternoon decided to study further the qualifications of candidates certified for the vacant job of Milwaukee public museum director. The board will meet again at 3 p.m. next Monday.

Board President William M. Lamers said there was no reason to "rush into" the appointment of a director to succeed Will C. McKern, who has retired.

The city service commission Friday certified three out of town museum directors as eligible for the post. Fourteen applicants, including six Milwaukee museum staff members, had been considered.

Data to Be Distributed

Detailed biographical information on the three top candidates will be distributed to the board before Monday's meeting, it was agreed.

Ald. Fred P. Meyers, a trustee, suggested that the three men be brought before the board for interviews. No action was taken on this proposal or another by Ald. Clarence A. Heiden, also a trustee, that a subcommittee of the board visit the three candidates at their present posts.

King Isn't Ready to Vote

Trustee Anthony J. King said that he was not ready to vote on a director. He added that the board might want to consider the fourth and fifth persons on the civil service commission's list. He said he believed there were others qualified in the applicant group, although the board might be satisfied with any one of the top three.

The certified candidates were Stephan F. de Borghgyi, now director of the Stovall museum of the University of Oklahoma at Norman; Arnold B. Grobman, director of the Florida state museum at Gainesville, and Kenneth W. Prescott, director of the Kansas City museum, Kansas City, Mo.
